Thomas Schneider

Thomas Schneider is an expert in Internet governance and in the governance of the information society, in particular media/new media regulation, human rights and consumer protection.

Schneider is currently the International Information Society Coordinator and Deputy Head of International Affairs at the Swiss Federal Office of Communication (OFCOM).

He is representing Switzerland in the UN Commission on Science and Technology for Development (CSTD), which is responsible for assessing the WSIS-Follow-up in the UN System. He is acting as regional coordinator for the WEOG governments in the Multistakeholder Advisory Group (MAG) of the Internet Governance Forum and as of October 2014, is serving as the Chairman of ICANN's Governmental Advisory Committee (GAC). Thomas Schneider is one of the initiators and coordinators of EuroDIG, the European IGF and vice-chair of the Council of Europe's new Steering Committee on Media and the Information Society (CDSMI). He is representing Switzerland in the ITU Council Working on WSIS (CWG WSIS) and has been co-chairing the ITU Council Working Group on stakeholder participation in ITU's activities related to WSIS (2006-2009). From 2003 to 2005, he was coordinating all Swiss activities in both phases of WSIS (Geneva 2003 and Tunis 2005).

Schneider was born in St. Gallen in 1972 and lives near Zürich. He studied in Zürich and Berlin and has a master's degree in history, national economics and English literature. He likes alternative rock music and French vintage cars with hydraulic suspension. He is able to communicate in English, French, German, Italian and Spanish.
